Sight for the Blind

We must remember that it is not with the eyes only that we see. To see with the eyes only is to be no better than a camera. We 'see' with the mind: this could be called insight. We see with the imagination: this could be called vision. And we see with the heart: this could be called understanding. But it goes deeper than that. It is to see with compassion.

The story of Bartimaeus has relevance for us on another level. The story is not just a healing story. It is a discipleship story. St Mark tells us that as soon as Bartimaeus got his sight back, he 'followed Jesus along the way'. That doesn't simply mean that he joined the crowd on road to Jerusalem. There can be no doubt what Mark intends: Bartimaeus became a follower of Jesus. In other words, he became a disciple. That is the climax of the story.

From being a mere believer, Bartimaeus became a disciple. There is a big difference between the two. One could be a believer without it having an effect on one's life. But when one becomes a disciple, one tries to live as a Christian.

Physical sight is a marvellous gift that we should never take for granted. But faith is more precious still. As sight is to blindness, so is faith to unbelief.
